Coffee Background

Alianza Café is a cooperative based in Buesaco, a municipality in the Nariño Department. Working together, the group has become a coffee producing powerhouse. They have blossomed from an initial 100 founding members in 2017, to 1,000 members today. Their farms are spread throughout the region at dizzying altitudes ranging from 1,900 to 2,300 masl.

Nariño is a small department on the corner of Colombia that borders Ecuador and the Pacific Ocean. The region sits just a hair above the equator, and some of the highest-grown coffee in the world is found here. The towering altitude, framed by warm days and cool nights, is the perfect environment for slow coffee maturation and concentrated sugar development in coffee cherries.

Green coffee from Nariño tastes like a smooth cup with warm, nutty flavors. This organic coffee from Alianza Café, sourced in partnership with Lohas Beans, is medium-bodied and full of roasted almond and cane sugar notes, with bright hints of citrus zest.
