Coffee Background

Mandheling coffee is named after the Mandailing people who inhabit northern Sumatra. Sumatra is Indonesia's large, westernmost island. It is home to a wide range of tropical flora, fauna, and microclimates. Farms on Sumatra are typically 0.5 to 2.5 hectares and scattered across remote regions. They are connected by a network of collectors, processors, traders, and exporters that together push the coffee into the global supply chain.

Sumatran coffee dominates Indonesia's coffee industry with 60-70% of the country's total coffee volume being produced here. Our Sumatra Mandheling coffee beans come from smallholders in the Aceh province, where rich soil and high altitudes make up an ideal environment for growing Arabica coffee.

The wet-hulled coffee process, locally known as Giling Basah, is the method of choice in Indonesia due to the humid climate. The wet-hulled process has become synonymous with Indonesian coffees and contributes to its unique cup profile.
