Coffee Background

Guji is a unique coffee region that sets itself apart from neighboring areas like Yirgacheffe and Sidama with distinct coffee varieties native to the landscape and a balanced, complex flavor profile that comes with them. It's a rural location, but despite its accessibility challenges, woredas (districts) in Guji like Shakiso have still made names for themselves in the global market with a reputation for fantastic coffees.

The Sawana Washing Station, at 1,800 to 2,200masl, is a prominent hub for processing Shakiso green coffee, whether it's with the natural or washed process. The coffee cherries for this lot were sourced from smallholders in the community.

In the washed processing method, freshly harvested cherries are meticulously sorted and pulped immediately, with the beans then fermented in water to break down residual mucilage. After fermentation, the beans are thoroughly washed and re-sorted using the flotation method, which removes any defective beans that float to the surface. Finally, the beans are sun-dried to achieve the optimal moisture content, ensuring both quality and stability for export.
