Coffee Background

Chiapas is Mexico's southernmost state, bordering Guatemala, with coffee-growing conditions influenced by the Sierra Madre mountains and proximity to the Pacific and Gulf coasts. The climate is humid and subtropical, with fertile volcanic soils that contribute to the cup's balance and sweetness.

Typically mild and clean with a medium body, gentle acidity, and notes of chocolate, nuts, and subtle citrus or red fruit depending on the lot.

This coffee is grown by smallholder farmers cultivating traditional varieties under shade. The washed process highlights clarity and consistency in the cup, making it ideal for both blends and single-origin offerings.

These lots support rural livelihoods in Chiapas, where coffee is a vital crop for indigenous communities. Many producers use eco-friendly farming practices and rely on community mills for processing.
