Coffee Background

Rising along the border of the Democratic Republic of Congo, the Rwenzori Mountains - also known as the Mountains of the Moon - form one of Uganda's most dramatic coffee landscapes. Within this range lies Kasese, a district whose high-altitude communities cultivate exceptional Arabica in fertile volcanic soils and cool, misty microclimates. The region long served as a lifeline crop for rural households, and today it is rapidly becoming one of Uganda's most celebrated sources of high-quality natural coffees.

Coffee has become one of the most economically significant crops in Kasese, grown across nearly all sub-counties and providing vital income for rural farmers. The area's high elevation - over 1,200 meters above sea level - cooler temperatures, and abundant rainfall create ideal conditions for slow-maturing Arabica with pronounced sweetness and complexity.

After selective picking, fresh cherries are delivered to Kyagalanyi's mill where they undergo natural processing. Coffee cherries are sun-dried on raised beds with the fruit intact. Regular turning encourages even drying and prevents over-fermentation. Natural processing at high altitudes gives this Rwenzori lot its signature smooth, aromatic profile while honoring the region's longstanding traditions.
